

Alice Ishiguro Tosey has been working as an independent creative since 2021. Having lived and worked in both London and Tokyo, she's gained over twelve years industry experience across both locations. She stays connected to creative education, finding fulfilment through visiting lecturer roles at universities in the UK and as a volunteer for The Typographic Circle, helping to run their student events.

In 2024 she completed a double degree masters between Kyoto Institute of Technology and University of the Arts London, Camberwell. Her studies inspired a values-led design approach, facilitating workshops that aim to foster shared understanding and empathy with others. The workshops hope to raise awareness of intercultural learning opportunities and uncover new forms of communication through play and design.

Using creativity to explore culture and community through her mixed heritage of Japan and the UK, Alice is driven by purpose, motivated through learning and works towards positive change.
